Form 990, Part III, Line 4b, Program Service Accomplishments:

In addition, students learn about making choices, and how each choice carries a consequence, either positive or negative. A key component of the curriculum is reminding students that their disability is just a small part of who they are, and an important piece of their "life puzzle." Similarly, that puzzle piece in no way defines in its entirety who they are or who they are meant to be. In the self-advocacy component, students are introduced to the rights they have and the laws that are set in place to protect them. Each lesson is taught through various mediums including videos and guest speakers. Lessons are interwoven and designed to help combat significant learning loss typically associated with the summer months that is even more prevalent in youths with disabilities.

This self-contained program provides classroom education and vocational training to better prepare graduating seniors to enter the workforce after graduation. H.I.S.D. transports, provides meals, and administers the required standard classroom education for the students while H.E.A.R.T. implements the job skills and employment training in food service, food supply chain operations, vending, and concessions, to help these students be "job-ready" and give them work experience before they graduate. Learning how to prepare hot meals, chop fruits and
